Over the last 3 years, the IIS project has brought together 7 European partners and 10 pilot schools to develop 4 training modules and a coaching guide to help primary and secondary schools to implement inclusion. As the project nears to an end the partners and pilot schools of the IIS project share what the project has taught them

“Through this project I’ve learnt that serious and effective steps towards inclusion in schools do not depend on a certain amount of resources. It depends on the shared vision of inclusion of all stakeholders and on collaboration and communication between them.”

Ulrike Achmann, Project Coordinator, Landes-Caritasverband Bayern, Germany

“During my time in this project I have learnt how powerful effective partnerships are for the inclusion process. Through this project I have been able to witness this at a European level, within our project consortium and between our pilot schools, down a community and intra-school level, proving that when we work together, inclusive education is a real and achievable goal.”

Rachel Vaughan, Project Partner, European Association of Service providers for Persons with Disabilities, Belgium

“We have improved our educational practices more than we expected. The process has taught us to work in teams and in collaboration with families, to help each student to develop his/her potential and to teach the students to accept and respect differences”

Nuria Perez Estruch, Teacher at IIS pilot school, Col.legi Sant Miquel, Spain

“I have been inspired by the different national approaches towards inclusion and by the energy to pursue this goal despite of many obstacles. For me the core of the project was the exchange of ideas between the countries and the implementation and reflexion of them in the own country. I also learnt that coaching is a powerful tool to initiate change in schools. I also grew very much in my own personality regarding the management and the communication in an international network. Thank you so much for this unique opportunity.”

Anna Jerosenko, Project Partner, Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität, Germany

“Inclusion does not consist of adapting society to those who are different, it consists of understanding that we are all different. All differences have a place in society if we are willing to accept this fact.”

Arnau Taberner López, Project Partner, Plataforma Educativa, Spain
